Without titlepage or pagination; Register i, ii, iii, a–s, aa–oo, aai; aaai, Aii–L. This copy has 366 printed leaves and two blank, one between the preliminary matter and the Inferno, and the other between the Inferno and Purgatorio. It has 19 engravings, i.e. one to each canto of the Inferno from I. to XIX.; all the engravings are pasted on except those to Cantos I.–III.

— [Another copy.] FEW MS. NOTES. 679. k. 9.

This copy has 366 printed, but no blank leaves; it has a cancel of the last leaf of sig. d printed on the recto only; the leaf containing the prologo to the Paradiso varies in this copy, having the signature aaai, instead of aai, and 47 lines beside the title, instead of 48 as in the other copy. This copy has nine engravings, i.e. to Cantos I., II., III., VIII., IX., XVI., XVII., XVIII., XIX., of the Inferno. The first three printed, the others pasted on the blank spaces left for them; the engraving to Canto III. is a repetition of that of Canto II. There is also an engraving of Dante pasted on a fly-leaf at the beginning of the book.

— [Another copy.] 639. m. 2.

This copy has 366 printed and two blank leaves, i.e. one between the Inferno and Purgatorio, and one at the end of the book; the verso of the leaf preceding the Paradiso is also blank. This copy had three engravings to the first three Cantos of the Inferno; that to Canto I. has been cut off with the margins of the book, and that to Canto III. is a repetition of the one to Canto II. The first leaf is slightly mutilated.

— [Another copy.] C. 7. e. 7.

This copy has 366 printed leaves, and one blank leaf between the Inferno and Purgatorio. It has only one engraving, that to Canto II., the one to the first Canto having been cut off, and its place supplied by the arms of Joseph Smith, the British Consul at Venice. There is a small engraving of Dante inserted between the preliminary matter and the Inferno.
